History

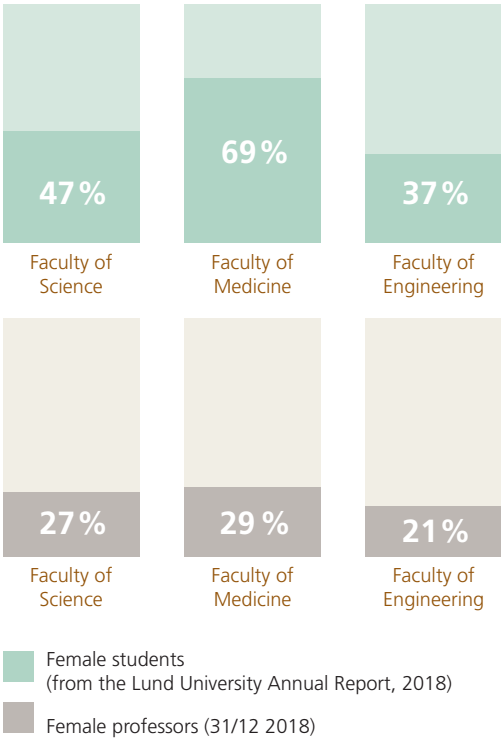

WINGS was founded in 2003 by female doctoral students at the Department of Geology as a response to the fact that there were no female professors at the department.

During 2007 WINGS expanded to include the whole Faculty of Science and in 2012 the network was further expanded to include also the Faculties of Medicine and Engineering.

The three faculties have research areas that thrive from cross-faculty collaborations and therefore a network as WINGS is highly valuable.

WINGS is an all-inclusive network in the STEMM* disciplines. Our activities are open to all doctoral students, post-docs, researchers, teachers, technical, and administrative staff at Lund University.

*Science, Technology, Engineering, Mathematics, and Medicine.

Why

Visibility

We encourage women who are passionate about STEMM by highlighting positive influences. We strive to make female professionals at Lund University more visible and to break down gender stereotypes in academia.

Networking

We offer platforms and tools for people to meet, inspire, empower, support, learn, discuss, relate, collaborate, and initiate new multidisciplinary projects.

Awareness

We raise people's awareness about unconscious biases that lead to gender inequalities in the workplace and student environment.

WINGS is financially supported by the Faculties of Science, Medicine, and Engineering and complement the work carried out by Lund University's Faculty Equality Boards.

How

We are coordinated by a steering committee consisting of Lund University professionals and students.

We organize seminars, workshops, lectures, annual meetings, and enable collaborations to challenge the status quo.
